LUNCH FÜR GUTE LEHRE

Teaching employability skills: the focus of an internationalised curriculum

Increasingly, the internationalisation of higher education is considered a tool rather than an aim.

The real aim is that students acquire employability skills for their future profession.

In this lecture we will ‘unpack’ the notion of employability skills and explore how academics can facilitate that students acquire such skills.

A key employability skill is critical thinking and this will be the focus of the lecture.

Dr. Jos Beelen

■ is Professor of Global Learning at The Hague University of Applied Sciences, where he leads a research group that explores the skills of lecturers to develop and teach internationalised curricula. He has published a range of articles on the implementation of internationalisation at home. Jos is also a Visiting Professor at Coventry University and a senior trainer for the European Association for International Education (EAIE). From that association he was the recipient of the 2018 President’s Award for his contribution to internationalisation at home.

WORKSHOP

Rethinking the quality of your programme: internationalizing learning outcomes’:

We will follow the approach of the Certificate of Quality of Internationalisation (CeQuInt), introduced by the European Consortium for Accreditation in 2015.
